THE following Index has been made in obedience to the Act of Parliament, 23 and 24 Victoria, chapter 91, which relieved the University of Oxford from the necessity of surrendering possession of the documents to which the Index relates and transmitting them to the Registry of the Queen's Court of Probate.

Until the 12th of January 1858, when that Court was established, the University possessed the right of having Wills proved, Letters of Administration granted, and all questions arising in Testamentary Causes determined, in its own Court.

Privilege
of the University in the matter
of Probate.

The origin of the power thus vested in the Chancellor of the University, like the origin of the University itself, is lost in obscure antiquity. The most reasonable supposition appears to be, that, being part of the Chancellor's spiritual jurisdiction, it was at first derived, with the rest of that jurisdiction, from the Bishop of Lincoln, the Diocesan of the University, and was conferred by him virtually, if not expressly, when he confirmed the election of each successive Chancellor¹, and admitted him to his office. Long usage, supported by papal and royal grants, seems to have given the Chancellor a prescriptive right to this jurisdiction long before the University was freed from the necessity of sending him to the Bishop for confirmation; and from the year 1368, when Pope Urban V granted that exemption², the Chancellor entered on his office as soon as he was elected to it, and at once took in his own right and independently all kinds of jurisdiction which his predecessors had any way enjoyed before³. At any rate it is observable, that the Bishops of Lincoln and Archdeacons of Oxford who at any time called in question the spiritual power of the Chancellor seem never to have denied him all ecclesiastical jurisdiction, but only to have disputed its extent.

¹ Our earliest records concerning the office of the Chancellor speak of him as elected biennially.

Antiquity
of the privilege.

Be the origin however what it may, the privilege can be shewn to have existed for more than six centuries. For it was one of those customs of the University which were disputed by Bishop Oliver Sutton, soon after his advancement to the see of Lincoln in 1280, and which the whole body of Regents and Non-Regents then asserted against him, as having been enjoyed by them time out of mind, "a tempore quo non exstat memoria ⁴."

Earliest
known
example.

The earliest known example of the custom is to be found in the Muniment Room of University College, and is more than five hundred years old. It is the Will of William Hampton, dated and proved in February 1337 ⁵, and comprised among the ancient title deeds of his dwelling-house called Hampton Hall, which was situate in the parish and street of St. Mildred, and, though now forming part of the site of the southern quadrangle of Lincoln College, belonged to University College during the period 1357-1463.

The privilege
not surrendered
in 1346,
as Wood
represents.

At the time when Hampton's Will was proved, and for some years previously ⁶, the extent of the spiritual jurisdiction exercised by the Chancellor was disputed by Cardinal Gailhardus de Mota, Archdeacon of Oxford, or rather by his agents or deputies; but in February 1346, after a discussion between certain duly authorised representatives of the Cardinal and of the University, an agreement was made, by which, if Wood's summary of it were to be taken as correct, this right of granting probate was surrendered to the Archdeacon ⁷. The wording of the agreement is clumsy and confused, and there are some errors in the extant transcripts of sexto kal. Martii anno Domini MCCCXXXVI^{to} coram nobis Johanne de Aylesbury Reverendi Viri Magistri Roberti de Stratford Cancellarii Universitatis Oxon. Commissario generali." From another document concerning the same property it appears that the testator was a Member of the University, "Scholaris Universitatis."

⁵ "Probatum fuit istud testamentum in Ecclesia fratrum Carmelitarum Oxon. Lincoln. Dioces.

⁶ See Wood's Hist. Univ. Oxon. an. 1325, 1330.

⁷ See Wood's History, an. 1345, ed. Gutch, vol. 1, p. 441. In the Latin edition the agreement or "Compositio" is printed at nearly full length, and its meaning is left to the intelligence of the reader.

it⁸; but, if a reader bears in mind the fact, which he may easily learn from other documents, that the Chancellor had claimed the right to exercise archidiaconal or ecclesiastical jurisdiction, especially by inflicting punishment for incontinence, over persons who stood in no special relation to the University, he may without much difficulty apprehend the terms of the arrangement. It first provides for the rights of the Chancellor; and these are expressed in three sentences or clauses. He was to have undisputed jurisdiction, "omnem et omnimodam jurisdictionem sine contradictione... Archidiaconi," over all Doctors, Masters, and Students of the University, clerical as well as lay; except only that the parochial clergy of the place were to be subject to the Archdeacon in the way of canonical obedience, going to him for induction to their benefices, and submitting to his visitation in respect to the books and furniture of their churches. The Chancellor was to have the like jurisdiction, without any exception at all, over the servants of all Masters and Students, and over the six Bedels, and the four Stationers or Booksellers of the University. And he was to have spiritual jurisdiction, described as "plenam jurisdictionem archidiaconalem," over all Writers or Transcribers actually employed in that capacity by Students; but upon the decease of such Writers the Archdeacon was to grant probate of their Wills or administration of their effects. Surely, if the phrase "omnis et omnimoda jurisdictio" in the first two clauses were not sufficient, this special reservation to the Archdeacon of the right to grant probate in the case of Writers shews clearly that in all the other classes of persons which had been enumerated that right was left with the Chancellor. The next sentence of the agreement provides concerning all other persons, "de caeteris personis omnibus," who in other respects belong to the Chancellor's jurisdiction, that the Archdeacon should have the right of punishing them in their lifetime for such acts as laid them open to spiritual correction, and of granting probate of their Wills after their decease⁹. Probably it was conus correctionem et punitionem debitam super criminibus et excessibus ad jurisdictionem archidiaconalem pertinentibus, insinuationemque et approbationem testamentorum suorum ac omnia alia et singula quae negotium hoc concernunt."

from this sentence that Wood understood the Composition as providing that "the Archdeacon shall have the Probate of Wills;" but the "caeterae personae omnes" of whom it speaks are persons different, not merely from the Writers mentioned immediately before, but also from all the persons comprised in the preceding clauses, whose Wills, as we have observed, were to be admitted to probate by the Chancellor.

Persons
within the scope
of the privilege.

It appears then that in the middle of the fourteenth century the Chancellor's jurisdiction in testamentary matters applied to all Members of the University, and to all who were engaged in their service. In process of time it extended to all persons who partook of the privileges of the University in other respects: or perhaps it may be more correct to say, that in process of time persons of several other descriptions became entitled to partake of the privileges of the University, and that all who had the privileges were necessarily liable to the jurisdiction.

In a Composition made between the University and the City of Oxford soon after the middle of the fifteenth century, February 23, 1459, it was settled, "that these and none other enioye the privileges of the Universite, that is to say, the Chaunceller, alle Doctours, Maistres, and other graduatis; alle studentz, alle Scolers, and alle Clerkes dwellyng with- in the procinct of the Universite, of what condicion, ordre, or degree so evere they be; every dailly contynuell servaunt to eny of theym bifore rehearsed belonging; the Styward of the Universite and feed men of the same Universite with their menyall men; also alle Bedells with their dailly servauntz and their housholdes; alle Stacioners, alle boke- bynders, lympnours [linners or illuminators, luminarii], Wryters, pergemeners [parchment makers, pergamenarii], Barbours, the belle rynger of the Universite, with alle their housholdis; alle Catours [caters, caterers], Manciples, Spencers [dispensers or stewards], Cokes, lavenders [laun- dresses], pouere [poor] children of scolers or Clerkes with- in the procincte of the said Universite; also alle other servauntz takyng clothing or hyre by the yere, half yere, or quarter of the yere, takyng atte leste for the yere vi*s.* viii*d.*, for the half yere iii*s.* iiiii*d.*, and the quarter xx*d.*, of eny Doctour, Maister, graduat, Scoler, or Clere, withoute fraude or malengyne [evil design]; also alle common caryers, bryngers of scolers to the Universite, or their “ money, letter, or eny especiall message to eny scolere or Clerk, or feccher of eny Scoler or Clerk fro the Universite, for the tyme of such fecchyng or bryngyng or abidyng in the Universite for that entent ¹⁰.”

Large as this list is, the following Index contains the names of several persons who are not brought within it by the description of them given in their Wills. Some of these, as for instance, surgeons and apothecaries, were certainly admitted to the privileges of the University under the title of their respective callings; and perhaps, notwithstanding the Composition of 1459, those privileges came in course of time to be granted to almost any applicant. But it is clear also that persons often got themselves entered among the servants of some College or Gownsmen for the sake of enjoying the privileges, or rather for the sake of avoiding civic burdens, although they received no wages and their service was only nominal ¹¹. No one, even to recent times, could carry on any trade or exercise any profession in Oxford without having been admitted either to the freedom of the City or to the privileges of the University: but the fees and other pecuniary charges to which the citizens in former times were liable were far greater than those which were incurred by matriculated men ¹²; and there were other duties likewise, the serving on juries, for example, from which privileged persons were anciently exempt. But the tendency of modern legislation is to annul all privileges: the Reform Act and the Municipal Corporations Act have greatly changed the position of the freemen of the City, and made the participation of the privileges of the University a matter of far less value than it used to be; and the number of townspeople desiring admission to them is not now a tenth part of what it was a hundred or even thirty years ago.

¹² Privileged persons had an advantage over others in respect of taxation. See Wood's History, an. 1601; and Registr. Privilegg. Univ. Oxon. Cart. Edw. IV, §§ 46, 64; Cart. Hen. VIII, § 29. They were allowed to exercise any retail trade or handicraft by Cart. Hen. VIII, § 24.

of the Chancellor to grant probate of Wills, the custom alleged in reply did not extend beyond the Wills of students dying within the University¹³. At that time only three Colleges at the most had been settled in the place, University not before 1253, Balliol about 1265, Merton somewhat earlier than 1274; and the number of students who had died away from the University leaving property behind them here must have been exceedingly small. It is not surprising therefore that the only Wills then mentioned were those of students dying in Oxford. But, even if the actual place of death were ever a criterion for limiting the range of the jurisdiction, it soon ceased to be a matter of importance; and according to the analogy of archdeaconries, dioceses, and other districts, whether ecclesiastical or secular, the Chancellor's authority was called into exercise in respect of property lying within the precinct of the University, wheresoever the deceased possessor might have died, provided only that at the time of his death he were subject to that authority. The jurisdiction was determined by two considerations; first, if the deceased were either a student or a privileged person; secondly, if he left property within the limits of the University.

Jurisdiction of the Chancellor
supreme,
not subject
to the Archbi-
shop's prerogative.

But within those limits and in the case of those persons the jurisdiction of the Chancellor was absolute and supreme. No one but he could in such cases grant probate of a testator's Will or administration of an intestate's effects. Neither the Archdeacon nor the Bishop could interfere; and, strange to say, the Prerogative Court was equally powerless. The Chancellor exercised an authority, not subordinate to the Archbishop's, but coordinate with it. If a testator possessed bona notabilia, that is, property to the value of £5, in two or more dioceses of the same province, the right of granting probate of his Will was vested in the Judge of the Prerogative Court as Official of the Archbishop; but, if he also had property within the precinct of the University, the Archbishop's probate did not enable the executor to get this into his possession, but he was obliged to take out probate afresh from the Chancellor's Court.

This is a feature in the privilege for which it is not easy to account. For the Bull of Pope Boniface IX in 1395¹⁴, by which he granted to the University an exemption from all spiritual jurisdiction, metropolitical as well as diocesan and archidiaconal, was very soon renounced, in consequence of the remonstrances of Archbishop Arundel, first under Richard II, and afterwards a second time under Henry IV¹⁵; and, if the Bull given by Pope Sixtus IV in 1479 for the same purpose¹⁶ has had any force at all, it certainly has not availed to exempt the University from the visitation of the Archbishop of Canterbury as Metropolitan¹⁷.

It does not appear that this claim of the Chancellor was ever called in question before a competent court: at least nothing is said of it by Gibson when he recites judgments which had been given concerning the prerogative of the Archbishop in regard to the Probate of Wills¹⁸. But the register of the Chancellor's Court for the year 1502 makes mention of a case, which, if it had been pressed to the uttermost, might perhaps have drawn forth a decision upon the point. Thomas Scow, a fishmonger of Oxford, and a privileged person as being servant of a student, died in that year, leaving bona notabilia in more than one diocese of the province besides what he had within the precinct of the University; but he was very much in debt, had been arrested in London at the suit of one of his creditors, and died there in prison. It is not clear whether he had made a Will or was intestate, nor whether his widow actually obtained either case.

¹⁴ Although Wood, Hist. Univ. Oxon., prints the Bull of Boniface under the year 1301, as though it belonged to the eighth Pope of that name, he nevertheless gives very strong reasons for assigning it to Boniface IX, whose pontificate was nearly a century later. And the matter seems to be placed beyond all doubt by the following expressions in a letter addressed by the University to Archbishop Arundel, and extant among the letters of Bishop Bekynon in Lambeth MS. 211, for a transcript of which I am indebted to the Rev. George Williams, Fellow of King's College, who is preparing that collection of letters for publication under the

probate or letters of administration in the Prerogative Court ; but she seems to have been in possession of his effects. Another creditor, a Bachelor of Arts of Merton College, to whom Seow was indebted by bond, commenced a suit against her in the Chancellor's Court for the recovery of his debt. She made answer, that she was willing to pay him ratably with other creditors so far as the estate of the deceased would allow ; but she refused to make full satisfaction of the claim. The creditor however insisted on his whole debt ; and in due course the Commissary ordered her goods to be arrested until full payment should be made, pronounced her contumacious for not appearing, and granted a decree of suspension against her. Upon this she made complaint to the Official of the Archbishop, and induced him to grant an inhibition against the Commissary upon the ground that his proceedings were an invasion of the Archbishop's prerogative. A strong remonstrance against this interference was immediately addressed in the name of the whole University to the Archbishop himself ; in which it is worthy of remark that the Chancellor's right to this jurisdiction is not made to rest upon papal bulls, but upon long usage and the grants of English Sovereigns¹⁹. The Archbishop, Henry Dene, promised in reply, that, if the cause went on, he would do nothing in it to impair the privileges of the University ; but he intimated that the see of Canterbury also had rights, which he was equally bound to uphold, and that the widow ought to be regarded with favourable consideration²⁰. There is no further record of the case, and nothing to shew how the matter ended.

But, whatever view we may think the Judges in recent times would have taken of this branch of the Chancellor's jurisdiction, if it had come before them in competition with the Archbishop's prerogative, there are very few pages of the following Index which do not furnish evidence of its exercise decisiones et examina aequa lance librare debere. Apud quem vero ubi semel agitatae sunt, in eisdem solus iudex censendus est."

in former days. They contain however no example of it later than the year 1767; and it seems to be highly probable that it was the trouble and inconvenience resulting from the exercise of this extreme right—which occasioned the rapid disuse of the Chancellor's jurisdiction in testamentary matters altogether. Two centuries ago a student's property would consist only of his scanty library and the still more scanty furniture of his room or lodging; or, if in the course of years he had been able to put by some small savings, he lent his money out upon bond or pledge, and had his securities always with him in the one place of his residence. But the increase of wealth in the country was in due time shared to some extent by the class of persons who came up to the Universities; and the growth of the national debt, which, though not an element of the nation's wealth, is certainly a consequence of it, furnished a source from which quiet men, averse from the turmoil and anxieties of commercial speculation, could secure a certain income by the investment of even small amounts. Now it has been ruled that property invested in the public funds is situate in the diocese of London, because the place of payment is the Bank of England; and therefore it was necessary to prove the Will of every fundholder, who lived without the limits of that diocese, either in two or more Courts of separate jurisdiction, or in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury as overriding others. That the Will of every, or almost every, person who partook of the privileges of the University should be attended with the trouble and expense of a double probate was an evil too great to be very long endured. The necessity for taking out two probates was the very evil which, when happening in two dioceses of the same province, the Archbishop's prerogative was of old intended to remedy; it was one of the evils which have lately led to the establishment of the Queen's Court of Probate as the single tribunal for the proof of Wills; and it is not to be supposed that any special jurisdiction, like that of the Chancellor's Court in Oxford, would be suffered to perpetuate it. The Registrar of that Court was practically the person with whom lay the discretion of pressing or waiving the right of jurisdiction in this particular: the Registrar who enforced it in 1767 died the next year, and his successors very wisely forbore to insist upon a claim which might have endangered the existence of the Court itself: the claim, kept vilege.

back in some cases, could not be advanced in others, and at last fell so much out of use that for more than forty years before the right was actually abolished by Act of Parliament no grant either of probate or of administration was made by authority of the Chancellor of the University ²¹.

Value and extent of the documents to which the Index relates.

If all the Wills that were proved under the privilege had been registered and preserved, together with the various transactions concerning them, the collection would be one of extraordinary value. But the series is far from being complete. The earliest registers have been lost for centuries; the first few of those which remain are neither continuous nor regular; and there is scarcely one original document older than the reign of Elizabeth, that is, three centuries earlier than the time when the privilege was taken away. Yet the documents which are still extant, and to which the following Index relates, are very valuable to us in Oxford for the light they throw upon the personal and social history of our academical ancestors. They consist of Wills and Copies of Wills, Administration Bonds, Inventories, Accounts, and of entries of various proceedings in the Registers of the Chancellor's Court. Those which are original, or authentic copies of originals, were bound up in folio volumes about twenty-five years ago by the care of the late Keeper of the Archives, the Wills in fifteen volumes, the Administration Bonds in eight, the Inventories in ten, and the Accounts in two. The Registers of the Court amount to sixty-eight volumes, every one of which has been carefully examined page by page for the compilation of the Index. The first four Registers and part of the fifth are anterior to the reign of Elizabeth, and supply information concerning about three hundred and twenty persons of whom no original document remains: fifty more names of the same description are found in the remaining portion of the fifth volume: the other sixty-three volumes contain records of testamentary matters scattered up and down over their pages, from which have been gleaned the names of barely twenty persons who would not otherwise have been included in the Index. The documents range over a period of nearly four centuries, beginning in 1436, and ending in 1814. The former of those two years is the date of the earliest, the other of the latest, of the extant Wills: the oldest Inventory was made in 1443: the oldest Account was rendered in 1453. The total number of deceased persons enumerated in the Index is 2253, from whom we have Wills extant of about half the number, namely, 1173: there are 899 Inventories, of which the latest belongs to the year 1740: the Accounts are no more than 113, none of them later than 1719.

The short descriptions following the names in the Index ^{Particulars of the Index.} are merely such as can be gathered from the documents cited, except in a very few instances, where for some particular reason other information, which is printed within hooks, appeared to be desirable.

The following letters and marks are used to indicate the several documents.

By P. is denoted a Will, or a copy of a Will, proved.

P. a record of a grant of Probate with no Will extant.

A. an Administration Bond.

∧ A. a record of a grant of Administration with no Bond extant.

W. a Will, or a copy of a Will, with no note or record of Probate or Administration.

A.W. a Bond for Administration with Will annexed.

A.W. a record of such Administration when the Will is extant, but the Bond is lost.

I. } an Inventory, the asterisk being employed when
* } any of the preceding letters is used.

Acc. } an Account, the dagger being employed when † } any of the preceding letters is used.

For example, *A. denotes an Administration Bond and an Inventory, †I. denotes an Inventory and an Account, and †*P. signifies a Will, an Inventory, and an Account.

Occasionally, in place of a letter, an entire word is printed, expressive of some special fact, which is the only matter recorded in that particular case; as, that a "Caveat" was lodged against granting Probate or Administration without giving notice to the person lodging it, or that a "Monition" was issued from the Court to the representative of the deceased person to prove the Will or take out Letters of Administration.

The date following a letter or word is the date of the document or fact indicated. Whenever the symbol *W. occurs, denoting a Will which has no note of Probate or Administration, but which is accompanied by an Inventory, the date of the Inventory is given in a foot note, because it is a limit for the date of the testator's death.

The ten volumes of Inventories mentioned above contain a few which do not relate to property of deceased persons, but to goods arrested by order of the Court for debt or other reasons; and some of these may perhaps be included in the Index, because the reason for making the Inventory is not always intimated in the document. But in this and in all other particulars the utmost pains have been taken to ensure accuracy, and it is hoped that no serious error will be discovered.

The Index is followed by Chronological Lists of the Wills, Inventories, and Accounts, which have been provided for the convenience of persons who may wish to examine the documents in that order. A similar List of Administrations has not been thought necessary. In these Lists the dates ascribed to Inventories and Accounts are not always the dates of those documents themselves, but belong rather to the Probates or Administrations with which they are connected, a deviation from strict accuracy which will not cause any practical inconvenience to the student.
